PROJECT CONTEXT

Over recent times, discussions on globalisation, digitalisation, automation, AI, online platforms, e-trade, information technologies, and robotics on government agendas have entered the lives of individuals in a fast and concrete way due to a global coronavirus pandemic.

Governments and institutions globally have been examining the impact of automation and digitalisation on the labour force and are taking measures for “decent future of work” for every individual. Meanwhile, the use of digital technologies has become a necessity for the continuity of life at community level and for sustaining various basic services such as education, health, etc.

PROJECT AIM

Within the scope of the project, activities are carried out in cooperation with many institutions and organisations in order to evaluate the impact of current policies on the working life. At the same time, the Project will analyse the ways in which global and national trends are likely to shape the world of work in the future. Bringing these two strands together, the Project will support MoLSS to develop new policies aimed at preparing of the decent work of the future in working life. At the same time, the Project will focus on gender equality and ensure that it permeates all actions.
